Whole No. 87

PVT. GEORGE W. HUSKER

Mr. Husker, whose work on the coins of Africa is being published currently in the Journal, enlisted in the Army Air Force last June. In a recent letter from England he suggests the article be published in small installments as "I may get shipped to Africa and be able to check up on some of the stuff I rashly wrote for the Journal." We are pleased to publish the above photograph which was received with Mr. Husker's Christmas card.

For some time we have had prepared a list of the silver coins of France from Louis XIII to the Third Republic. It was the intention of the editor to print this list with a full range of illustrations but present conditions will not allow such an expense. Inasmuch as most of the types are the same as on the ecus we have appended before each series the number of the ecu in the "Silver Ecus of France" and now offer the list as a convenience to collectors of French coins. At some future date when we reprint the composition we will add the illustrations and such further information as we may have at that time. The values given express the Paris market for fine collector's specimens in normal times.

The Coins of the West Indies has now been published in pamphlet form. This publication completes the series for North and South America. Collectors wishing a complete volume on the subject have only to bind the five pamphlets in one. Don't ask us to do this for you as we have already ascertained that the cost of binding is too high at present to make it a worth while addition to our list.

Coins of the British Colonies on the East Coast of Africa

MOMBASA

5 1/2 cent. Similar except for value—
HALF/CENT.

Aluminum

- 6 1 cent. Similar to no. 4 but thicker.
7 1/2 cent. Similar to no. 5 but thicker.

All of this coinage was struck at the Royal Mint in London. The silver issues started in 1906 and the holed pieces the following year. The aluminum cents and half cents were struck in 1907 and 1908 only, being replaced in 1909 by nickel bronze pieces. The coinage for Edward VII ended in 1910.

GEORGE V {1910-1936}

Silver

- 8 50 cents. Obv. GEORGIUS V REX

EDWARD VIII [1936]

Bronze

- 6 1 cent. Similar except for value—ONE CENT.

The coinage in 1920 for East Africa was struck in accordance with an Order in Council which prescribed the British East African Florin as the standard coin. The subsidiary coins in silver and nickel bronze were in terms of cents of a florin. The coinage on this standard was discontinued in 1921.

Silver

- 7 Shilling. Obv. GEORGIUS V REX ET IND. IMP. Crowned bust, left. Rev. EAST AFRICA. In center, a lion walking right. Below, 1 SHILLING date.

- 10 5 cents. Similar except for value—FIVE CENTS.

In 1921 a shilling was substituted for the florin as the standard coin for East Africa and bronze coins in denominations of 10, 5, and 1 cents of a shilling replaced the nickel bronze coins struck on the basis of cents of a florin. Birmingham, King's Norton, and the Royal Mint participated in the issues.

- 12 10 cents. Obv. EDWARDVS VIII REX ET IND. IMP. Crown above hole; below, TEN CENTS. Rev. EAST AFRICA. 1936. Value, 10, above hole; on either side, two elephant tusks.

ISAAC COLLINS, Printer

By J. N. SPIRO

The imprint of Isaac Collins of Burlington is familiar to collectors and students of our Colonial and State notes, but who in the Numismatic Fraternity has ever seen a likeness of this pioneer printer?

Insofar as the writer could ascertain by exhaustive research, this is the first time a numismatic publication has reproduced this old engraving.

Isaac Collins printed the New Jersey colonial notes of February 20, 1776 and March 25, 1776 and the New Jersey State notes of 1781, 1783 and 1786. Prior to the Revolution he was located at Burlington, and after its closing was at Trenton. When Congress decided on the issue of notes in 1780, to be pro-rated by all the thirteen States; which were interest bearing, and were also "guaranteed by the United States," those issued by New Jersey were printed by Hall & Sellers, as all of this issue were. No doubt Benjamin Franklin had sufficient influence to place this printing contract in Philadelphia, regardless of the official printers of the various States effected.

It is interesting to note, that the first New Jersey newspaper was the New Jersey Gazette, of which Collins was the publisher and editor. It first appeared in October 1770.

In 1796 he established a print shop at 189 Pearl Street, New York City, which was continued by his descendents until as late as 1884. The first stereotyped plates [moulded plates] used in America were employed in this shop to print "Murry's English Grammar."

Roman Republican Denarii

By R. W. JOHNSON

Part Ten

Historical Types

References to contemporary, or at least recent, historical events are rarely to be met with on republican denarii prior to the introduction of the quadriga types relating to the Secular Games of 146 B.C. [see Part IV]. Timely allusions to Roman history of the late 2nd century however, are almost certainly to be found on the issue of Cnaeus Domitius [Part IV—No. 8], referring to the Gallic War with Bituitus; and, in the “Jupiter in quadriga” of Q. Caccilius Metellus [124-103 B.C.], commemorating the triumph of the moneyer’s father on his return to Rome after the Numidian War [107 B.C.]. Caius Fundanius [89 B.C.] also notes the recent successes of the famous Marius over the Teutones and Cimbri in 101 B.C. Figure 1 shows the general standing proudly erect in his triumphal quadriga. The youth seated on one of the horses may possibly be his adopted son. The contemporary implications of the type of Piso and Caepio [100 B.C.] have been covered in some detail—see Part V.

Roman supremacy in Italy was seriously threatened [91-88 B.C.] by the outbreak of the Social or Marsic War, between the Romans and Confederate Italian tribes—Marsi, Peligni, Samnites, Lucanians etc. Failure of the Romans to grant citizenship to Italian communities and to observe the provisions of the Lex Porcia [see Part IX—No. 24] were amongst the probable causes of the war. Its successful outcome was as much the result of injustices corrected and judi-ous legislation [Lex Julia and Plautia Papiria], as of military victories. The Confederates issued denarii from several mints—Corfinium, Bovianum and Aesernia. Several types were copied from contemporary Roman denarii; but the head of Italia was always substituted for that of Roma. Coins issued by the Confederates in north Italy bear Latin legends; those from the south are in the local Oscan script.

From the side of Rome we might note the obverse type of C. Fabi [90 B.C.] which displays the head of Cybele and the inscription “Ex. A. Pv,” referring to money drawn from the public treasury to carry on the Social War. C. Poblicius Malleolus [89 B.C.—Italian mint] also shows a reverse—Roma seated on a shield and crowned by Victory—commemorating local Roman successes. Prominent amongst Confederate types are:—figure 2, eight men [the allies] swearing an oath of allegiance over a pig; the Italian or Samnite bull trampling and goring the she-wolf of Rome [Oscan legend], figure 3; and, figure 4, a scene representing an ambassador of the Confederates debarking from a galley in a mission to secure aid from, or alliance with, Mithradates of Pontus. All local Italian mints were permanently closed after the Social War.

In 86 B.C. the aediles Fannius and Critonius issued a denarius with a reverse similar to the type of Piso and Caepio of 100 B.C. and likewise commemorating a largesse of corn; but it was 4 years later [82 B.C.]—the year of the inauguration of the Roman provincial coinage in Spain, Gaul and the East—that was to prove one of the most significant in the development of the Roman denarius. After this date all coins struck outside Rome came from the provinces. They are generally of a military character [minted by generals, consuls, legates, pro-consuls and pro-quaestors etc.] and constitute our best source of information on contemporary history.

First, from Spain, we have two timely and appropriate references to the war against Sertorius [82-72 B.C.]. The general C. Annius Luscus and his quaestor L. Fabius Hispaniensis struck a "Victory in quadriga" [figure 5] to commemorate the former's successes in the years 82-80 B.C. There is also the special issue of Cn. Corn. Lent. Marcellinus [76-72 B.C.], intended for payment to the Roman legions stationed in Spain. It bears the inscription "Lent. Cvr. *. F," proclaiming Marcellinus "curator denariis flandis" or paymaster; and resembles, except for change in legend, the type illustrated in Part VIII-No. 40. From Gaul [82 B.C.], the general C. Valerius Flaccus issues a denarius recording his suppression of a native Gallie uprising; also intending it as a memorial to the bravery of his cohorts against the Sertorians [see Part VIII-No. 45]. Two of the earliest commemorative denarii minted in the East [82-81 B.C.] refer to the victories of the Roman dictator, Sulla, in the 1st Mithradatic War [87-84 B.C.]. The first type, figure 6, was probably struck by Lucullus out of a tribute of 20,000 talents levied on the cities of Asia Minor after the defeat of Mithradates VI. The 2 military trophies commemorate the battles of Chaeroneia [86 B.C.] and Orchomenos [85 B.C.]. Lucius Manlius, proquaestor of Sulla, also shows [figure 7] the dictator in a chariot at the time of his triumph in 81 B.C. after the war.

Returning once more to the mint of Rome [58 B.C.], M. Scaurus and P. Hypsaeus record the suppression of raids of the Nabathean Arabs [62-60 B.C.] with the submission of their king, Aretas, to Scaurus, and the payment of a fine of 300 talents to Pompey. In figure 8 [obverse] the king is kneeling beside a camel and offering the olive branch of peace. Four years later Aulus Plautius repeats the camel and kneeling figure motif, as a reverse type; but substitutes the legend "Bacchius Judaeus." The suppliant in this instance may be a Jewish prince or high priest [perhaps Aristobolus], symbolizing the eastern campaigns of the moneyer and the taking of Jerusalem by Pompey in 63 B.C.

Pompey's victories in Europe, Asia and Africa [for which he received the title of "Magnus" or "the Great"] are also commemorated on 2 coins of Faustus Cornelius Sulla, son of the dictator and son-in-law of Pompey in 54 B.C. Both types relate to his triple triumph. The first [figure 9] shows 4 wreaths surrounding a terrestrial globe. The side and bottom wreaths, also the globe, apply to his successes on 3 continents. The upper, represents a golden jewelled chaplet awarded to Pompey by the Roman people in 63 B.C. for wear on public occasions. The obverse of this coin shows the head of Hercules. "Hercules Invictus" later became the battle-cry of the Pompeians at Pharsalus. Our 2nd piece [Part VIII-No. 43], displays 3 military trophies and relates to Pompey's triple triumph on his return from the East in 61 B.C. This great Roman general was the first to make a grab for absolute power, and some numismatists even go so far as to date the beginnings of the imperial coinage from Pompey. However this is not a generally accepted practice.

In 59 B.C., Caesar, Pompey and Crassus formed a coalition known as the 1st triumvirate, a sort of 3 man rule. The republican party of course objected strenuously to this high-handed procedure; Brutus their leader registering his opposition with a contemporary denarius displaying the head of Libertas [Part VII-No. 19], but all to no effect. Publius Crassus, son of the triumvir, issues a very interesting contemporaneous piece 4 years later, in which he shows a warrior holding a horse by the bridle [figure 10], relating to a troop of 1,000 Gallic horsemen raised by the moneyer for service against the Parthians.

After the War with Sertorius [72 B.C.] the provincial military coinages were temporarily discontinued. Julius Caesar revived them in Gaul [50 B.C.] with his type showing an elephant and sacrificial implements—see Part VIII, obverse No. 26 and reverse No. 35. The following year Caesar crossed the Rubicon and the period of great Civil Wars begins. Pompey was forced to flee from Rome in the same year. Before he left however, two of his moneyer's, Q. Sincinius and Cnacus Neri [49 B.C.], issued types appropriate to their leader. Sincinius shows a winged caduceus, palm branch and wreath symbolizing Pompey's triumphs; and Neri, the legionary eagle and 2 standards inscribed with the letters "H" and "P," representing the Hastati and Principes, two of the main political groups supporting Pompey. This type was copied from the earlier denarius of C. Valerius Flaccus—see also Part VIII-No. 45. Caesar now dominates the mint of Rome until his death in 44 B.C. and all historical coins minted there apply to him.

Most prominent are those referring to Caesar's recently completed conquest of Gaul [58-50 B.C.]. The first was struck by Caesar in 49 B.C., soon after his arrival at Rome and the flight of Pompey. It was issued for special distribution to his victorious troops and was minted from booty obtained in Gaul and from the looting of the treasury at Rome. The obverse [figure 11] shows the head of Pietas and a rather unusual form of the Roman numeral 52 [an inverted "T" in place of the customary "L"], indicating Caesar's age at this date. On the reverse of the same coin [figure 12] we see a Gallic trophy and axe, commemorating his military victories in that country. He also struck another denarius in the same year showing his most dangerous adversary, the Gallic chieftain Vercingetorix, kneeling at the foot of a trophy [figure 13]. Vercingetorix was captured by Caesar at the fall of Alesia [52 B.C.], adorned his triumph at Rome in 46 B.C. and was finally strangled in the Marmertine prison. L. Hostilius Saserna [48 B.C.] also depicts Vercingetorix in a Gallic war biga [figure 14]; and Decimus Albinus Brutus—a moneyer who served under Caesar and held a special command against the Gallic chieftain in 52 B.C.—strikes a piece illustrating a round and an oval shield with 2 war trumpets in 49 B.C.

Caesar championed the cause of the common man in Rome against the aristocracy, so we are not surprised to find C. Vibius Pansa issuing a denarius with a Liberty head obverse in 49 B.C., commemorating this fact and celebrating the deliverance of the city from her oppressors. Brutus and his party were later to proclaim themselves the liberators of Rome from Caesar, as we shall see presently. Decimus Albinus Brutus [not the assassin of Caesar] also shows "2 hands clasping a caduceus" [similar to the type illustrated in Part VIII-No. 41], expressing the good feeling existing between the citizens of Rome and Caesar, and commemorating the latter's corn distribution at the capital in 49 B.C.

Our scene now shifts to the Civil War in the provinces. In Spain [49 B.C.] the Pompeians, Cn. Calpurnius Piso and Terentius Varro, strike denarii particularly appropriate to their leader. Both types refer to his clearing of the Mediterranean of pirates [66 B.C.], with their allusions to naval warfare and the sea. Piso [figure 15] includes Pompey's honorary title "Magnus" [above the prow]; as does Varro. The eagle and dolphin [Part VIII-No. 28] may also refer to the Pompeian land and sea forces in the Civil War, or, to Pompey's triumph over Mithradates of Pontus. Julius Caesar defeated Varro's Spanish legions in 49 B.C. and in the same year issued a denarius [in Spain] displaying a trophy of Gallic arms [figure 16] referring again to the conquest of Gaul. In the lower left field we see a small British war chariot [essedum] commemorating Caesar's campaign against the Britons in 54 B.C. The visit of the Pompeian consuls Lentulus and Marcellus to Sicily enroute to Greece [49 B.C.] is symbolized by the obverse type of the "triskeles"—see illustration Part VIII-No. 42.

Pompey was finally overthrown at the battle of Pharsalus in 48 B.C. and later assassinated in Egypt. Just prior to Pharsalus we have the piece of Lentulus and Marcellus struck at Ephesus to supply pay for the Pompeian legions and fleet [Part VII-No. 26]; and, after the battle, a coin of Caesar with the head of Venus [Part VI-No. 27]. "Venus Victrix" was the battle-cry of the Caesarians in this engagement.

Caesar now continued the war against the loyal Pompeian forces in Africa and Sicily. Utica, the headquarters and main base of operations of the Pompeians in Africa, is symbolized by the turreted head of the personified city-goddess [figure 17] on a coin of Metellus Pius Scipio and P. Crassus [47-46 B.C.]. This piece was probably struck at Utica. In Sicily 47 B.C., A. Allienus minted denarii [with the head of Venus and a reverse showing the hero Trinacrus] to pay troops supplied to Caesar for action against the Pompeians in Africa. Again, from Africa, Julius Caesar displays the head of Ceres [obv.] and his titles on a special "donation" piece issued to the Caesarian legions after their victory at Thapsus in 46 B.C. [figure 18].

The great ovation accorded Caesar in Rome [46 B.C.] on the occasion of the celebration of his 4 triumphs in Gaul, Egypt, Pontus and Numidia is commemorated on several coins. Especially appropriate are the head of Triumphus [figure 19—obverse] on a contemporary piece of L. Papius Celsus; and, a splendid bust of winged Victory [obv.] issued in the following year by T. Carisius.

Meanwhile Cnaeus and Sextus Pompey [sons of Magnus], as representatives of the aristocratic Senatorial party, determined to carry on a war of vengeance against Caesar in Spain. They appear to have been popular with the provincials if we may judge by the Spanish coinage of this period, [46-44 B.C.]. Two coins in particular relate to their hearty welcome—the piece of Cn. Pompey and M. Publii [figure 20] shows Cnaeus Pompey disembarking from a galley and receiving greetings from Hispania or Baetica, who holds out a palm branch. On the other [struck by Cn. Pompey and M. Minat. Sabin], Cnaeus is standing between Baetica and the kneeling Tarraeco [figure 21]. Caesar immediately set out for Spain, and, after a number of bitterly fought battles, defeated the Pompeian legions at Munda in 45 B.C., later slaying the fleeing Cnaeus. Caesar's Spanish denarius of 45 B.C. [figure 22] depicts a trophy of Gallic and Spanish arms, and beneath, a captive Gaul and weeping Hispania, alluding to his recent Gallic conquest and the battle of Munda, with the rescue of the country from the patrician party.

EARLY AMERICAN MEDALS

OSWEGO CAPTURED

1758. Obverse. LUDOVICUS XV ORBIS IMPERATOR [Louis XV, Emperor of the world.] Under the head, 1758. Laureated head of King to right without drapery; hair tied with ribbon.

Reverse: WESEL, OSWEGO, PORT-MAHON. In exergue, EXPUG. S DAVIDIS — ARCE ET SOLO — AEQUATA. [The fort of St. David's taken by storm, and levelled to the ground.] Four forts flying the French flag.

Silver. Size 20. Reeded edge.

Fort Ontario, at the mouth of the Oswego River and within the present limits of the city of Oswego, New York, was originally built by the English in 1727, after a trading post had been established a few years before to further Indian trade and to frustrate French attempts to keep English colonies within narrow limits. Oswego lay in the heart of the territory owned by the Indians of the Six Nations, and although they resented the intrusion of the British, they welcomed the protection the post would offer them against the frequent raids of the French. The friendship of the Indians however wavered from time to time, and they renounced the English a few years later at Albany. The fortifications at Oswego were strengthened in 1755 and the following year Fort Ontario was attacked by the French.

Montcalm, learning through spies that the British were delayed in Albany, and that their forces were weakened by sickness, seized his opportunity to attack

Fort Ontario. He gathered together an army of 5,000 Frenchmen, Canadians and Indians, at Frontenac [now Kingston, N. Y.], and on August 11th he crossed the lake and began an assault on the fort. The garrison of Fort Ontario, under Col. Mercer offered spirited resistance, but were shortly forced to retreat to an older fort on the west side of the River, where they fought bravely but were finally forced to surrender. The French received 1,400 prisoners, a great deal of ammunition and supplies as well as 134 pieces of artillery and several vessels which had been anchored in the harbor.

The Six Nations, still resentful of British intrusion on their lands, asked Montcalm to demolish the forts, and when he had done so, the Indians took a position of neutrality.

The three other forts mentioned on this medal were taken by the French about the same period, and are: Wesel — an important port on the Rhine in the Prussian Provinces; Port Mahon, the capital of Minorca off the northern coast of Africa; St. Davids on the Coromandel Coast on the Bay of Bengal in Asia. With the capture of Oswego in America, France commanded forts in each of the "four quarters of the globe," which lead Louis XV to place on this medal the boastful title "Emperor of the World."

In 1759 the British rebuilt Fort Ontario, and held it throughout the Revolutionary War. It was delivered to the United States in 1796.
